Which parts of your design are you most proud of? I am most proud of overall look and feel of my website – my goal is to share information about my professional and educational experiences in a way that feels informal and imitates a casual conversation between friends.

What struggles did you encounter in your design process? I mainly struggled with the formatting of my website. I had a good idea of what I wanted the layout of my site to look like, but spent a lot of time finding the 'right' font, font size, font weight, and colors. I went back and forth a lot on my choices, and am still not sure I am fully happy with the current font and colors.

Which struggles did you encounter during page development? My two main struggles were: using floats (it took some time to figure out how to make floats work the way I wanted) and making my site responsive (I am still working on this – my main problem is around having the height of certain divs get smaller when I want them to).

What did you learn from making your project responsive? I learned a lot about designing for differently sized screens (finding the right font size, determining which information to keep on the site for smaller screen sizes, etc.). I am still currently working on making my website responsive – I am struggling with changing the heights of certain divs and images for smaller screen sizes.
